Biological process prediction without limitation of conventional mathematical models is an important advantage of ANN for MBBR operation control. Cristea et al. [11] have studied the capacity of neural networks for the assessment of plant behavior in integrated urban wastewater system simulations.

Abstract The design of a simulated moving bed (SMB) process relies on valid thermodynamic predictions of multicomponent adsorption built up from accurate binary adsorption equilibrium data. Experimental adsorption equilibria of binary mixtures constituted by propane, propylene, isobutane and 1-butene on 13X zeolite were determined using breakthrough experiments at 373 K and 150 kPa.
